Ranga Rao Category:Indian films Category:Indian romantic comedy films Why, you wouldn't want a decision to be made by some group of scientists and not the public? It was in the name of "science." If scientists do a good job, then the public will get what it wants. If they don't get what they want, then there is nothing to be gained from passing a law, and that's just what this will do. There's nothing to be gained from the public getting what they want either. One of the men writing the charter, National Commission on Air and Space, had this to say about writing the charter, back in 1970 (here's the whole quotation; the article has more): "The charter will be the basis of the international 'hierarchy of missions.'" This quotation would make sense to someone whose job is to make sure that the United Nations comes to a reasonable and responsible agreement. But it doesn't make any sense at all to someone who is seeking to undermine democratic processes by opening up space to international control by a small group of scientists and technocrats. When you put that quotation together with the fact that the UN is not equipped to do anything very useful and that it's been doing a lousy job for many years, you can see why some people say that it has been a disaster. There's also a fundamental question about the space program itself. The military uses space for two purposes, missile guidance and for surveillance. Both those uses are legitimate. The space program has traditionally been used for the same purposes. That said, we are in a different era of technology.
