He was an intimidating man, tall, dark and handsome. Her knees almost buckled when he asked her to dance. After a few dances she thought she was about to faint. After trying to decide whether to run away or dance with the handsome stranger she lost consciousness. She woke up, bloodied, lying in the grass. Her attacker was gone. It was an early morning at the lake. Lisa was sitting in the sun, watching her father swim. She loved to watch her dad swim, and she watched him the whole time he swam. She loved watching the water ripple when he moved, and she loved watching him swim and smile. She loved watching him swim, but as he swam up and into the shore, his smile turned into a gasp for breath. Darkest Before Dawn (KGI series)(13).
