Create and organize multiple windows as groups. You can create, adjust and move these group. Designed for Windows 10. App Installer: App Review: Short Review: WindowBox is a Windows 10-based application to group and manage multiple windows. Long Review: What is WindowBox? To summarize it in one word: WindowBox is a tool to create, organize and manage multiple windows. It's free software that can organize windows from multiple taskbars, control windows as groups, and move them together. This tool is a much-needed, free alternative to Windows Task Manager, a task switcher panel in Windows. Unfortunately, such free software doesn't always come without a requirement to act somewhat similar to old computer programs that used to be paid for. Unfortunately for WindowBox, the application is designed for Windows 10. Overall, WindowBox is a first and free application, but can be quite limited due to its Windows 10 design. It's also important to mention that you can't create more than one group with WindowBox. However, as already mentioned, this is enough to get you through various tasks. Although WindowBox can only organize windows from taskbars, a Windows desktop or multiple desktops can be managed in a single group. What's more, WindowBox is quite easy to understand, and it's definitely a good alternative to Windows Task Manager. Instead of manipulating several different menu items, you can simply use the application's customizable window list, where you can quickly choose and adjust the application. Its window control panel is also a breeze to use. One of the most important advantages of WindowBox is that it doesn't require Windows RAM or CPU cycles to function. If the RAM is low, the application can immediately close opened windows. Last but not least, WindowBox is an application that aims to make your work easier and more convenient. Let's take a look at some of its features, starting with the main function. Main Function When the application is launched, it shows a list with the available tasks on your desktop. This is shown below: By default, the application shows five targets. You can add more by clicking plus at the bottom right. When the target is selected, the list updates in real time. The list also shows you information about which window is selected, how many open applications are available,

Size is a quick and simple window organizer. WindowBox Key Features: Easy to use Very fast Free Review: Key features: Free Seperate multiple windows in multiple groups Easy to use Draw your own window frames Provides a window list with full-sized icons Hide/unhide windows Windows streched and shrunk Automatically minimized Can be tray-icon Provide a window list with multiple columns Customizable margins Supports multiple hotkeys Review Windows streched and shrunk and maximized Move all windows of a group Show or hide window of a group Automatically minimized Run in tray icon Customizable margins Supports multiple hotkeys The application makes use of a window list. You can add your own windows to that list. There are no icons to keep track of, but a thumbnail of the corresponding window is shown in the list. When you click a window in the list, it shows up in the second pane, and you can select it. If the window doesn't fit into the spaces you defined, it's automatically resized to fit. If you want to change the dimensions of a window in the list, you simply drag the lines you want to define into the window. Grouped windows are created automatically when you click add. The aim is to get as many windows as possible into one group. You can also ungroup a window and create a new one, or change the columns of the window list. The application offers options to expand a window to fill the height of the screen. This is easily done by clicking and dragging the window's right border. It's done automatically if you do it a few times, but you can also execute this manually. WindowBox also keeps track of which window is maximized. This means that the window itself can be minimized, so you don't have to hunt for it in order to see it. Of course, there's the possibility to show all windows maximized, or only partially, so you can decide if it's the best solution. Hotkeys can be assigned to the application, so you can quickly move a window of the list. There's a difference between key toggles and hotkeys. While key toggles will toggle the visibility of the window, hotkeys will move a window to the location defined by a marker.
