Vermont's senators voted Thursday to approve all the pieces of a major climate change bill to be considered by the state's legislature next week, setting up a rare bipartisan show of support for a sweeping measure after years of the politically polarized state's elected officials refusing to tackle the issue. State leaders hope to pass the bill next week and send it to the governor to be signed into law by the end of the year, but a final vote on one of the most significant pieces of climate legislation to be considered in years, the bill to tax carbon emissions in the state, has stalled in the state's House. Vermont was one of the first states to enact a statewide carbon tax, and it's been a model for similar proposals in the nation as states seek to curb carbon emissions and reduce reliance on fossil fuels. Passage of the legislation would mean Vermont would be the first state to bring a plan to cut carbon emissions and support 3da54e8ca3
