A suspension of interest on student loans can provide a huge boost to a teenager's future, especially if they're taking gap years. Suspended interest on student loan repayments is a policy that cuts the amount of interest that student borrowers pay each month, during the period of their study. While repayments are much more affordable with this interest cut, it's important to look at the total cost of the loan. There are three different types of student loans: UNS: This is a loan provided through the Universities and Colleges Union and is available to students taking part in, studying for, or working at post-16 education or higher education institutions in England. Part-repayable: This is a loan provided by the government and available to students taking part in, studying for, or working at post-16 education or higher education institutions in England. Repayable: This is a loan provided by the government and available to students taking part in, studying for, or working at post-16 education or higher education institutions in England. Here's how suspended interest can help you pay off your student loan. Why is suspended interest on a student loan useful? Suspended interest means that there is no interest on the loan for the time when it's in the process of being paid off. In other words, while the loan is in payment mode, the monthly repayments are calculated at a much lower interest rate, as shown in the example below. The monthly repayment is the only loan-related expense, and the amount you pay is based on how much you have left to pay back. This means that every month spent in a job to pay off the loan means more money going into your bank account. It's a policy that could really add up over time. "When the monthly repayment is added in (during the loan period) it's in effect on a no interest basis - so it could potentially result in a massive saving," Paul Daffey, personal finance expert at MoneySavingExpert, told BBC News. "For many people, this could be very useful." If your student loan includes a "repayable" element, the Government has waived one year of interest for students, but this is only available on loans taken out before 1 August 2012. When should you apply for a loan? The best time to apply is when you've graduated from college or
