This prospective study compared treatment outcomes and patient satisfaction for complete denture wearers between conventional and custom-made overdentures, following a four-stage treatment protocol. Complete denture wearers (n = 180) at a university clinic completed a baseline questionnaire and were randomly assigned into two groups; group A received a conventional, "off the shelf" edentulous overdenture (EOD) and group B received a custom-made EOD. All procedures were completed over a 4-month period with two recalls. Weights were recorded at the three time points and color stability assessed using a Vitapan Porcelain 5 M stain. Clinical data included oral and systemic health, oral hygiene, health-related quality of life, eating quality, and satisfaction. All participants returned for a 1-year review. Weights and oral hygiene ratings were equivalent between groups at each time point. Group B demonstrated significantly higher color stability (p The King of Curls Here's a look back at an intrepid gentleman who didn't know how to wash his hair, but made it work. I wonder if Mr. Caruso was the original Phantom of the Opera? It makes me wonder if I should retire my Princess Leia and Han Solo on bad hair days and let Mr. Caruso keep his hero status. I'd love to know the copyright status of this clip. If you know, please let me know.Q: Using fill as background of a shape and
